Foster's body was found in the negro quarters near the edge of the city limits, where officers believe it was thrown after his slayer had taken it there in Foster's automobile. It was believed that Foster was shot while sitting in the car. He was shot with a shot gun, one charge entering the abdomen and the other the hip. The other automobile did not stop, slowing down to see the damage done and then speeding onward. A passing motorist took the dead man and injured to Prescott. George Wheelington is survived by his wife, one daughter and nine sons. Authorities said no trace of the driver of the automobile had been found.

50-Cent Profit Brings Rum War

EL PASO, Tex., March 31.—(AP)—Good whisky brings $2 a pint in saloons in Juarez, Mexico, a stone's throw across the Rio Grande. On this side bootleggers deliver the same grade for $2.50 a pint. In that same 50-cent spread lies a thrilling story of relentless warfare against smugglers. Physical conditions favor smugglers. Among Mexican manpower eager to risk life or arrest to earn $1 to $2.50, 10 minutes wading the shallow, murky Rio Grande under the burden of a case or two of liquor. Opposed are United States customs, border patrol and immigration officers. The result has been almost nightly warfare—minor outbreaks to pitched battles. So accustomed has El Paso become that the city sleeps soundly while rifle and pistol bark. Little attention is paid even when fights occur within city limits. Risking their own lives nonchalantly, the smugglers display an utter disregard for others' lives. Fourteen United States officers have been slain in and near El Paso. Juarez and El Paso, center to center, are six minutes apart by trolley. Yet the border patrol was established four years ago has an American citizen been found participating in the smuggling. Some officers believe there are Americans behind the racket. They have learned that bootleggers bargain for liquor in Juarez on a basis of delivery on the American side. Many smugglers prefer to run their loads across the international boundary just above El Paso, where only a monument marked line separates Old Mexico and the American side of New Mexico, but as it passes here and turns southeast towards the Gulf of Mexico the Rio Grande is not much of a river nor very grand. It is shallow and sluggish, and sometimes a good broad jumper could hop across it. As long ago as 1899 an effort to make the temperamental Rio more tractable resulted in establishment of a smugglers' haven. Cordova Island is no island at all, but a bit of Mexican hatched on to El Paso 30 years ago when the Cordova Cut-off was negotiated as a flood prevention measure and the Rio Grande was trampled further south into Old Mexico. While the bed of the stream ordinarily marks the international line, artificial changes in its course do not count with the International Boundary Commission. Shaped like a fan, Cordova Island makes a big swing into El Paso, and many of the streets in the southern part of the ancient city El Paso del Norte the face of the north run blind into the "island." There it is that the law enforcement officers and smugglers frequently battle. Aided by a dense growth of cottonwood saplings fringing Cordova Island, smugglers can run their loads right up to the international line without fear of being molested—except by hijackers. When darkness creeps in from the desert, Cordova Island becomes a hotbed of rum runners. They aim for friendly huts on the American side to cache their loads and collect.

Still We Have More Radishes

Peak of the Radish Har- vest Reached Last Week

What is considered to be the peak of the big radish harvest was last week 48 cars left from various points along the P. & N. W. Ry. The market opened strong but fluctuated during the week, and the market was much lower the last part of the week due to weather and a flooded market. This week they will begin the harvesting of mustard and turnip greens, along with the late sowing of radishes. The radishes have been of fine quality, and the Blevins radishes are bringing a better price than those of other states that are on the same market. If the weather stays favorable in the east and north, the late radishes and greens should bring a fair price. Sweet corn and tomatoes are the next crops that will be harvested from this section which will be in late June.

"It Won't Be Long Now"

Dreams of good roads has finally materialized in northern Hempstead county. Tuesday's issue of the Star brought you the news of finished No. 24 highway from Blevins to Nashville, and a much needed road from Blevins to Hope.

Never has there been such enthusiasm shown. This part of the state has been isolated. No. 24 highway was the only one passable, and during the bad spell of weather you either took that road or else. Work has been started, finishing No. 24, and the survey of the Blevins to Hope road will start in a few days. When No. 24 is finished it will mean a straight road across the northern part of the county, connecting with 67 north and south, and it will be known as highway No. 19 after it leaves Prescott east on through Camden. Tourists that travel on the Bankhead may leave the highway and catch the Blevins to Hope road which will lead them on into Oklahoma.

With this new work, Blevins will be situated as a junction, which means the biggest thing in the history of Blevins. It means more money will be spent in these towns, and also means new people for our county which it takes for any development.

Think of the hundreds of tourists that will traverse these highways, and see the gigantic industry such as the truck growing.

Runners were afraid that it was impossible to get a road. With the aid of the Chamber of Commerce of Hope, and a few individuals in the northern part of the county, and the able engineer, R. B. Stanford, the project was put over, and is now being started.

It is estimated this year the building program will be much larger than ever before. When they say that northern Hempstead county is the home of health, wealth, and prosperity it "ain't" nothing else.

Our Poultry Column

Edited by
Prof. Frederic H. Stoneburn

Without charge, our readers may secure expert personal advice on poultry topics. Address inquiries to Southern Poultry Bureau, Box 728, Memphis, Tenn. State your problem fully, enclose stamped self-addressed envelope.

MARKED changes in standard poultry feeding practice have been brought about during recent years by the discovery of the mysterious food elements which we now know as "vitamins." These substances are found in very limited quantities, but they have a marvelous effect upon the health and growth of our flocks.

Take vitamin D, for instance. When present in the ration it practically prevents that disorder of chicks which is commonly called leg weakness, or rickets. This vitamin, even though present in extremely limited quantities, enables the chicks to make full use of the minerals in the ration and so build strong bones. The ultra-violet rays in direct sunlight accomplish the same thing. But unless the growing chicks are exposed to the unobstructed sunshine or receive vitamin D in their ration, they will surely develop leg weakness. This explains why in former years, before the vitamin and its effects were known, it was difficult to successfully grow winter chicks in sections where there is but little sunshine during that season of the year.

VITAMIN D is found in largest quantities in cod liver oil. The oil is an absolute necessity in the rations supplied chicks which can not be frequently exposed to direct sunshine, as those grown in battery brooders or in sections where there are long periods of cloudy weather. If sunshine is abundant, the oil is not required. Under such conditions it is, in the light of our present knowledge, a needless expense.

On the other hand, if the oil is needed it should be added to the ration at least every third day, as previously recommended in this column. Use a grade of cod liver oil which is guaranteed to contain vitamin D and add this to the mash at the rate of one pound to 100 pounds of mash. Or mix the oil with the scratch grains at the rate of one pound to twenty, so feeding that the oil grains will constitute a fifth of the total feed for the birds.

THE writer has long felt that, in view of the unstable character of the vitamin, the safest way to feed cod liver oil is to mix the fresh oil with the ration when needed. Then one knows that his chicks are receiving the required vitamin.

On the other hand, many poultrymen prefer to use commercial rations which already contain the oil. In such cases, one should be sure the feeds used are perfectly fresh, as recent experiments conducted at the famous Cornell Agricultural Experiment Station have shown that the essential vitamin gradually loses its potency when such feeds are held for any considerable time before using. To be safe, then, and fully protect the chicks, fresh oil may well be added to the chick ration if there is any uncertainty as to the absolute freshness of feeds in which the oil is incorporated in the feed mill.

Up-to-Date Gin Being Built by Washington Resident

The foundation for a new modern type gin has already been built, and the material is already on the ground for a large, sized capacity gin to be erected by the Stroud Ginning company of Washington. The owners of the gin are now operating two gins at Washington and one now being erected at Bengin has long been wanted by the cotton growers in this district. It will be modern in every detail, and will be finished by fall to take care of this year's crop.

C. J. Weisenburger of Hope R. 1. states that he has been using a protein supplement in his hog feed, and has found, after several years experience, that it pays him well. Cottonseed meal is a cheap form of protein for hogs and may be used in relatively small amounts to a decided advantage. Mr. Weisenburger states that he plans to enter the ton litter contest. There are now several entered in this contest in which a prize will be paid the three in the county who rank highest according to the score card, a copy of which may be obtained from the county agent.

Mack Smead 4-H club boy of Ozan has finished a self feeder for his hogs which he plans to use in feeding out 6 100 pound pigs he has now and he also plans to use the feeder in feeding his ton litter as soon as they are old enough to put on the feeder. The self feeder is a great labor saver since it eliminates a considerable amount of work in carrying and preparing the feed for the hogs each time they are to be fed. This is a "Cafeteria" style of feeding hogs. If given an opportunity they are wise enough to select the feeds they need most to make the quickest and cheapest growth.

Duck Without a Country

It looks like a duck and yet it also looks like a chicken—notice the feet. It can't swim, nor can it walk with rapidity. And because the rest of the flock of Evelyn Reese of Omaha can't decide what it is, it is shunned by both ducks and chickens. Only one thing is certain and that is that it's a bird—although it may be Lon Chaney, in disguise.
